Cancer gap with Europe 'not closed'

More than a decade after the last government launched its NHS Cancer Plan and almost five years after its Cancer Reform Strategy, the gap in survival rates between England and the best-performing European countries has not closed, a parliamentary report has said. According to Department of Health estimates, 10,000 lives could be saved each year if the NHS in England matched the best in Europe, said the House of Commons Public Accounts Committee. Key priorities for improving survival were improved public and GP awareness of the symptoms of cancer and earlier diagnosis, but there were "significant gaps" in the information gathered by the NHS about important aspects of cancer services. While mortality rates have fallen and survival rates improved over the past decade, there remained "wide, unexplained variations" in performance around England, said the report. Read More

Scientists Go Back to School

Neville Cobbe and Louise Rawling from Daimark Bennett's lab paid a visit to Pleasant Street School in Clarence Street, Liverpool on 30th March, where they met around 40 children and staff. The children (aged 10/11) all said they knew someone who'd had cancer, and named lung, breast and bowel cancer, brain tumours and leukaemia. The children were aware Jade Goody had died of cancer, and Kylie Minogue had survived. The children showed a good understanding of the lifestyle factors which can cause cancer, especially smoking. One young man was able to tell us what DNA stands for!

Following a demonstration of strawberry DNA extraction some of the many questions included:

- Can you clone a strawberry from that DNA?
- What is chemotherapy?
- How many cells are in the human body?
- How long does it take cancer to spread?
- Why do people with cancer lose their hair?
- Do all living things have DNA?

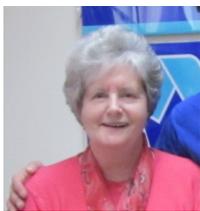

The children had so many questions that we have agreed to return in a few weeks to answer them. We have also been asked by the school to arrange a similar event for parents. The feedback from the children included: "It was boss", "really interesting," and "the experiment was like magic." Neville and Louise also enjoyed the experience and were very impressed with how attentive, responsive and informed the children had been. To help with future schools visits click here

Crosby doctor takes on Sahara desert marathons in memory of patient Dr Oliver Lutte has pledged to run nearly six marathons in six days across the Sahara Desert to raise awareness for ovarian cancer. The disease cut short the life of one of his patients, Janet Condliff. Dr Lutte, a GP at Liverpool's Brownlow Group Practice, said: "I wanted to do this for Janet because I was involved in her care from diagnosis in 2009 to when she died in November last year. Her cancer came out of the blue during investigations for knee pain. Sadly by then the cancer had spread and there was little hope of a cure." More

Cancer Robot at Mersey Hospital

The Royal Liverpool was set to be the first hospital in the North West to use the £1.6m daVinci robot, which will be used on prostate cancer patients. The daVinci Si is the most advanced robotic surgical system in the world, and there are only seven other hospitals in the UK with the robot. It is easier to use than older technology and more precise. The equipment could also be used on patients with gynaecology problems and in cases of bladder, kidney, and bowel cancer.

Robin Weston, consultant cancer urologist, who spent 12 months in Australia training on the system, said: “Robotic surgery is much better for the patients who are suitable to have this procedure. There are fewer complications, less need for pain relief and patients spend less time in hospital.” More
